Communicating with Elected Officials

1) Don’t feel bad if you don’t talk with THE elected official. Aides are top-notch. They write the legislation; they make the agency contacts; and they probably have deeper knowledge of your subject (but don’t assume this, especially with state legislators).

2) Establish a relationship with your elected officials and the aides who are responsible for your county.

3) Visit with them.
   Go to Office Hours!
   Visit their offices when you’re in town. Invite them to visit you when they are in your town.

4) Tout your successes. Give them a call. Send a newspaper clipping.

5) Invite them to events. (Even if the elected official can’t attend, he/she may send one of their representatives.)
   Legislators like cameras, reporters and microphones. They like their names on agendas. They like to be introduced to people.

6) Remember, elected officials can help with issues regarding the government.

7) If they have questions or want additional information, provide it in a timely manner (get back to them immediately if possible).

8) Have others talk about how important your issue is to them.

9) Remember County Board members are elected officials too.

Establish a relationship. Be available. Be realistic. Be helpful.

Developed by Cara Carper, Community Resource Development Educator, University of Wisconsin Extension-Green County